Elite Athlete Programming Flowchart

USA Swimming National Team Developmental Athlete Programming Strategies: 2016 Quadrennial

USA Swimming has long offered a spectrum of teams and camps to serve elite developmental athletes. One common debate in establishing a talent identification system is: Quantity versus Quality. Should pipelines be designed to “cast the net over” every possible athlete or should resources be targeted for athletes with the best chance of succeeding? Elite athletes can be identified younger than 18 years old, but no policy or guideline can identify every athlete with elite potential. In reality, “pipelines” are flawed, since they cannot be 100% accurate. One of the strengths of USA Swimming lies in the autonomy and freedom that coaches have in training their athletes; clubs are not solely dependent on programming to reach the highest levels and attempting to make them reliant restricts the identification process.

Many variables characterize the different constituent groups that comprise elite developmental athletes in our sport such as age, performance metrics, event, and experience. Elite athletes develop and mature at different stages of their careers that are difficult to predict. In the 2016 quad the USA Swimming National Team offers three strategies for identifying and servicing 18-and-under elite athletes. Below is a philosophical outline of those services. The over-arching concept of these programs is to nurture and develop the USA Swimming National Team culture of sportsmanship and excellence.

Strategy 1 Be inclusive to all athletes who perform at the highest level

National Junior Team

Athletes can qualify for the National Junior Team at any USA Swimming sanctioned or FINA approved meet, allowing coaches to select the best meet for their athletes and teams to compete in. This broad selection criteria casts a large net in an effort to identify athletes who achieve one of the top six 18-and-under times in Olympic events from January to September.

Strategy 2 Select a group of Elite Athletes based on their performance under pressure

World Junior Championship Team/Junior Pan Pacific Championship Team

This travel team identifies a smaller group of athletes (20-26 men and 20-26 women) who qualify by performing on a competitive stage with the best athletes in the country. From year to year, this team will be selected based on the fastest times from the results of a selection meet or meets. By being selected at these high level meets, athletes demonstrate their ability to perform under pressure, while still allowing the coaches flexibility in selecting their taper meet for their teams.

Strategy 3 Identify athletes who are competitive on the international stage

18 and Under World Cup Team

In an effort to identify athletes that are competitive on an international level, this team is selected based on world rankings at the end of the long course season in September. To qualify, women must have a time that is top 50 in the world and men must have a time that is top 75 in the world. The team is limited to the 10 highest world ranked men and the 10 highest world ranked women.
